A: There are a number of dynamic SQL based solutions, e.g. DataTrigger in WPF How to Create a List from a DataTable without first loading the whole thing into memory? Then there are n-tier lists: Online lists: Or you can use the streaming API Offline lists Which works like this (pseudo-code): first get the reference to the MemoryStream GetValues(memorystream, byType) then append the next chunk with EnumerateChunk() then fire the event you can read more about this approach in this question: How to keep a dataset in memory? A: The approach is to load all the records into the DataTable and then "walk" it to load all the information (by using the DataRow.Field[] properties) from the same row into the class members. Something like this: void LoadTable(String tableName, String className) { // Get the DataTable DataTable dt = GenerateDataTable(tableName, con); // Drop the first row to avoid SQL IN clause and ignore data in Excel sheet. foreach (DataRow row in dt.Rows.Skip(1)) ReadDataRow(dt, row); } void ReadDataRow(DataTable dataTable, DataRow row) { // Get the desired column names String columns = ""; foreach (DataColumn col in dataTable.Columns) columns += col.ColumnName + ", "; string sqlText = "INSERT INTO " + className + " " + columns + " VALUES " + "(" + cols + ")," ; // If you don't do this here you will miss the data in Excel, // as there is not a row in dataTable that has all the fields (columns) set. foreach (DataColumn col in dataTable.Columns) { row[
